

When we think of saints, we think of people who lived a long, long time ago. People who lived before cars, computers, and even cameras.

So instead of photos of them, we have drawings and paintings. And in those drawings and paintings we often see people who look old or serious.

Carlo decided to build a website that listed all of God's miracles. He wanted to teach other teenagers about God's power and love.

This website was going to take much longer than the other websites he had made. But Carlo knew that God was helping him, so he didn't give up.

He worked hard on this project for two whole years.

Carlo didn't wait until he was a grown-up to start living for God, and we don't have to either.

Like Carlo with his computer skills,
we can use whatever special talents
God has given us to make him happy.
